Student Research Opportunities at Truman State University

2008 Student Research Conference Poster Sessions

Truman provides many different venues for both undergraduate and graduate students to participate in original research, whether classroom based or faculty-directed research projects. There are also several summer research programs dedicated to fostering student research such as the McNair Program and plans to seek advanced training in his or her field may develop a research project which culminates in a research project with professors such as a capstone project. Truman students have published their research findings in national journals, presented at professional conferences, and participated in Truman’s annual Student Research Conference.

Additionally, the Center for Teaching and Learning (CTL) provides both faculty and students the opportunity to present their research at various conferences throughout the year. During the Fall 2009 semester, the CTL sponsored a dozen faculty and student trips to three different conferences including Missouri Campus Compact annual conference, International Society for the Scholarship of Teaching and Learning Conference at Indiana University, and International Research Conference on Service-Learning and Civic Engagement in Ottawa, Canada.

“What I like most about Truman is the undergraduate research. I have developed a close relationship with a faculty mentor and have learned research techniques and how to operate equipment that at larger schools is solely reserved for professors.”

-Angie Ingraham; Aurora, IL

International Student Profile

Alafiya Nasrulla from India has just graduated as a Communication Sciences & Disorders major from Truman. Let us hear what she says about Truman!

What attracted you to Truman State University? Truman has one of the best Communication Disorders programs in the Midwest.

How does Truman support international students? From orientation to counseling and advising, Truman strongly supports its international students!

How is Truman preparing you for the future? It is one of the few colleges that offer clinical experience at an undergraduate level. This gives me hands on experience in my major.

What would you like to say to new Truman international students? Get involved in as many things as possible; however, keep your grades up and be open minded to all the new experiences!

Kiplinger’s Names Truman a “Best Value”

Truman has once again been included in Kiplinger’s Personal Finance magazine as one of the “Best Values in Public Colleges.”

The annual ranking appears in Kiplinger’s February 2010 issue.

Truman was ranked 26th on the exclusive survey list of the 100 public four-year schools that “combine outstanding education with economic value.”

The University was also ranked as the 10th best educational value for out-of-state students.

ISAO is now officially on Facebook!
